Mayor Belhumeur and members of the City Council:

The Albany Bicycle Advisory Commission is asking that the council change the commission's name.

We're not sure how the word "safety" got to be part of the commission's official name. For some time, we admit, we didn't think about the name much. But as the group has become more focused on what we want to accomplish for the city and have been better able to define our role in city government, we feel that the name as it stands is too restrictive.

Certainly, bicycle safety is among our concerns. The helmet program that former members so successfully started is evidence of that. But we see our role as broader -- advising staff and the council about bicycle facilities as streets are improved or redesigned and making sure that bicycles are included in the city's updated transportation and parks plans, as well as encouraging safe cycling among all citizens through education and example.

We are more than a safety committee. We are an advisory body and would like our name to show that.

Thank you for your consideration. Please contact me if you have questions.

For the commission,
